A look at Midwestern manufacturing

The Chicago Purchasing Managers' index will give an assessment of how manufacturing did in the Midwest during September. Economists and investors view the Chicago PMI as an indicator of what the national report on manufacturing from the Institute for Supply Management will say. That report comes out Monday. The forecast is for a slight dip in the Chicago index, to 55.9 from 56.5 in August.

Another reading on consumers

The Thomson-Reuters/University of Michigan consumer sentiment index is being released three days after the Conference Board reported another drop in consumer confidence during September. So investors' expectations are low for today's report. Economists expect it to be unchanged from the last reading of 57.8. Consumers were watching stocks plunge during August and September. That has made many of them uneasy about the future.

Personal income and spending

The Commerce Department's report for August will show whether consumers' income rose or fell last month, and what they did with their money. It will show whether they were cutting back spending on expensive items like cars and computers as they worried about the economy. It will also show how much they are saving. During the recession, many consumers socked away money instead of spending.
